Archaeology and The Bible

This ancient artifact supports the authenticity of the bible

The Amarna Letters

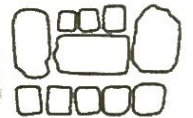

This collection of cuneiform tablets is named after the place they were discovered—modern Amarna, the ancient Egyptian city of Akhetaten. Written in the late 14th century BC, these letters record correspondence between Egypt (under Pharaohs Akhenaten and Tutankhamun) and its vassal states. They provide information about trade and government of the time.

The Amarna letters and the biblical text describe the end of Canaan's primary grain income that Canaan had several territories, various kings, and cities that served as the means of military control.

The Amarna letters describe the city of Shechem as a dangerous place full of political intrigue. The book of Judges tells the same at a later date. The Amarna letters also show that the kingdom of Canaan was under heavy military pressure from overseas tribes.

The Amarna letters are a collection of 380 tablets, with the largest measuring about 6 in. by 4 in.
